Introduction

Hospitals are a very important part of society as they maintain citizen health. For this project, we will pretend that the Portuguese government is looking where to build a new hospital in Lisbon. They are looking for help to decide where that location will be.

There are a variety of things to consider when answering this question. First, the government is interested in equal access to health care across the city. Therefore, they would like to know what average population is around the hospitals that already exist in the city and want to find places where hospitals would be needed.

By the end of this project, I will identify key areas in the city that would benefit from the addiction of a new hospital.
